What's New

In this issue, Hopelink welcomes new CEO Dr. Catherine Cushinberry, who started April 19 replacing the retiring Lauren Thomas. Cushinberry most recently served as executive director of City Year Memphis in Tennessee, and previously served as the director of research for the National Office of Girls Inc. and executive director of a Boys and Girls Club in Tennessee. Learn more on page 14.

Also new? This publication! Our new design and expanded content promise to engage our community, tackle fundamental issues and expand our shared knowledge and understanding of poverty today. Let us know what you think!
Dear Hopelink Community of Friends and Partners,

I am honored to serve as the new CEO of Hopelink. I am grateful for the warm reception I have received from so many members of our community. As a new resident of the area, it has been heartwarming to receive your notes and well-wishes. Thank you.

In this edition of Reaching Out, you will have the opportunity to learn more about me and enjoy a few pictures in more casual settings. I am happy to share this insight into my life, and I am eager to settle into my new home base and begin building new memories.

"I live and lead from a place of joy, excitement, hopefulness, an expectation of excellence, and most importantly, passion."

As the new CEO, I plan to spend time getting to know my Hopelink team members, the people and places affected by our work, and the partners and volunteers who breathe life into our vision of a community free of poverty. I have already started visiting our various sites and working alongside team members to keep our necessary and important work moving forward.

I am grateful to prior CEO Lauren Thomas for her leadership and for ensuring a seamless transition into Hopelink’s next 50 years. We have a beautiful journey ahead of us, and I am incredibly thankful to lead and walk forward with you into the future.

Yours in service,

Dr. Catherine Cushinberry
Hopelink CEO

Community in Action

Boeing

Boeing employees made sure it was a happy holiday for children this year! Every year, Boeing employees donate money to different organizations throughout Puget Sound. This year, however, was something special, as employees donated nearly $70,000 to Hopelink – more than double the largest amount they had donated in the past. Because of this generosity, Hopelink was able to double the gift card amount for children that participated in Hopelink’s holiday gift program.

Intellectual Ventures

Intellectual Ventures (IV), an invention investment company headquartered in Bellevue, has partnered with Hopelink for the past 12 years. IV employees held a virtual raffle in November to raise funds for Hopelink’s food and financial assistance program. In total, the event raised nearly $24,000.

Sammamish Rotary Foundation

The Sammamish Rotary Foundation has always been there, quietly helping Hopelink and the community. When Hopelink opened a new, larger Redmond center, the Sammamish Rotary Foundation paid toward shelving for the food bank. Then, later, they provided more funds to purchase food to distribute from the new shelves. When the pandemic struck, their COVID-19 Task Force approached Hopelink to ask which game-changing equipment could really help serve clients better during the public health crisis. Again, they funded a new reach-in refrigerator and several chest freezers to help safely store and distribute food to the increasing numbers of people needing food assistance during the pandemic.

Bear Creek School

Over the holidays, Middle School students at The Bear Creek School created individual PPE bags containing masks, sanitizer, tissues and a few winter items such as tea for Hopelink clients. The bags were distributed to residents in Hopelink’s Housing Program.

Sky Nursery

Sky Nursery in Shoreline gave back to their community and recently conducted an online fundraiser – matching each donation – to help their local Hopelink food banks purchase food. Through reaching out to customers, friends, staff and family, they spread the word about their fundraiser and raised $10,638. This was enough to fill 966 boxes of food and provide the equivalent of 20,286 meals for their community.

Eastside Firefighters Benevolent Fund raises money for happier Hopelink holidays

Eastside Firefighters Benevolent Fund held a fundraiser to help Hopelink purchase gift cards for families during the holiday season. In previous years, Eastside Firefighters Benevolent Fund held drives to collect gifts for the Hopelink Sno-Valley gift room, however this year they made a video to collect funds for Hopelink and Issaquah Food and Clothing Bank. Eastside Fire and Rescue’s creativity and transition to online fundraising helped pay for gifts for Hopelink families.
Feeding a community in crisis

Hopelink volunteers step up to help
A bell rings in the warehouse at Hopelink’s Kirkland center, and the Tuesday morning packing line lets out a cheer. Rumor has it the bell is to let someone know there’s a full pallet of boxes ready for the forklift, but for the volunteers who routinely finish their three-hour shift in two hours, it’s also a celebration.

The nine-member Tuesday morning crew – one of four shifts charged with packing a total average of 2,500 boxes of food every week since Hopelink centers were physically closed to the public early last year – also prefer to work through breaks.

“They have been incredible,” said Hopelink packing line supervisor Elena Lavrushin. “And we have so many new people, who had no connection with Hopelink before the pandemic. They just said, ‘I want to make a difference; I want to help out.’”

Michelle Neves, who began volunteering with the packing line in September, has long supported Hopelink – including growing extra produce to donate during the summer months – and is committed to doing whatever she can to help.

“Since the pandemic, I felt so helpless that I couldn’t do anything,” Neves said. “So as soon as the warehouse opened to volunteers, I signed up. I just felt like I needed to do something. And I find it so fulfilling … this group is a really good group.”

Heather Hall said she’d heard of Hopelink but wasn’t aware of where the Kirkland center was located until she happened to spot the building from a trail during an evening walk.

“During Covid, it feels really important,” Hall said. “Sometimes when I’m leaving after volunteering, there are people lining up (for food), and that just drives it home.”

She expects to continue volunteering once Hopelink food banks return to a grocery store model and her son heads off to college.

Monique Magraw and her husband are longtime Hopelink supporters – regularly attending events and participating in food drives – and she was excited to join a packing crew as soon as possible. In addition to spending the past year on the line, Magraw took to the local gleaning fields with Hopelink Harvest and began collecting produce for the organization’s food banks over the summer; another task she loved.

“I’ve done almost everything you can do,” Magraw said. “I really believe in what Hopelink does. There was a short time in my life when I needed a helping hand, and it’s important. We’re a small part of providing for people who really need it.

“And being there at one point in my life – what a blessing … being able to give back is huge for me.”
Fifth grade project spurs young activist to take on food insecurity

Meet Hopelink supporter Kai Vanderlip

Every year, the Greenbrier Homeowner’s Association in Redmond hosts a food drive to support Hopelink clients during the holiday season. Neighborhood residents come together to raise awareness about hunger and food insecurity in their community and encourage others to help by donating food items to help stock Hopelink’s food banks.

Unfortunately, the coronavirus pandemic changed everything; putting a stop to Greenbrier’s annual holiday food drive. Meanwhile, 16-year-old Kai was not ready to give up. With a passion for giving to his community and preventing food insecurity, Kai teamed up with the HOA to transition their annual food drive into an online fundraiser – raising $4,828 for Hopelink services! We spoke with Kai to learn a bit more.

Q | When did you first get involved with the Greenbrier HOA’s annual food drive, and what sparked your passion for this issue?

A | I first got involved with the fundraiser in 2016, when I was in the sixth grade, helping collect food donations for Hopelink’s food banks during the holiday season. Then in 2020, because of the pandemic and everything that was going on, we thought it would be safer and easier for our neighborhood to move the fundraiser online. The year before I first got involved with the fundraiser, when I was in the fifth grade, we did a unit in class about poverty and food insecurity, and how it impacts people. That class was the main reason I initially latched onto this particular project, to help my community in these specific areas.

Q | During the drive, what did you learn about the impact young people can have on significant issues facing our community?

A | Being a part of this fundraiser has shown me that kids can help out and give back to their communities; it’s not just something adults should be doing. When we were able to host the fundraiser in person, prior to the pandemic, we had kids as young as kindergarteners volunteering with our food drive. It’s never too early or too late, no age too young or too old, to get involved and give back to your community.

Q | As a young philanthropist, what do you think you’d like to do next?

A | Well, for starters, I intend to continue supporting the annual HOA fundraiser. But until that happens this upcoming winter, I am looking forward to getting involved with other initiatives in my community to work towards promoting equity and inclusion. I also hope to continue enjoying various volunteering opportunities, such as my work with the Kirkland City Youth Council.

What is End Family Hunger? End Family Hunger is a campaign that supports Hopelink's efforts to ensure that families in need of food and other resources are met with success. Since the onset of COVID-19, Hopelink has worked to ensure that so many families affected by the pandemic have had their basic needs met. Through the End Family Hunger campaign, your support will help us continue these efforts.

For more information about how to host a food, fund or coin drive, contact Liz Waesche at 425.897.3721 or EWaesche@hopelink.org or visit our website and download the End Summer Hunger Food and Fund Drive kit.

Back on our feet

Hopelink helps a resilient family build a new foundation

“She wants to be an artist. She wants to be a painter.”

That’s how Madeylen described her 11-year-old daughter, Maria, who created beautiful works of art while she and her parents lived out of their car for more than three years.

“That’s what she would do,” said Madeylen. “She would paint.”

During that time, Maria, her mom, and her dad Luis visited The New Bethlehem Day Center in Kirkland, where they could access food, showers, laundry, computers and other services.

Even there, Maria would paint. But at the end of the day, the three of them would spend their nights in a car … even through the cold of winter. Madeylen said they were often sick; suffering from colds and headaches.

Living in their car became the family’s only option when shared housing didn’t work out, and they didn’t have enough income to find a place of their own in King County.
“We experienced a lot of discrimination,” said Luis, who like Madeylen, emigrated from Honduras more than 20 years ago. “And people assume that everyone who is homeless is either a criminal or does drugs.”

The family sometimes slept in a park, while Luis continued to take whatever jobs he could.

Everything changed when the family received a referral to Hopelink.

In October 2019, the family moved into Hopelink’s Avondale Park shelter, where they immediately met with a case manager to discuss some of their goals. Without the stress of day-to-day survival, the couple began to focus on long-term stability; resuming their schooling, increasing their income and finding permanent housing.

But after so many nights in a cramped car, it was the simple comforts – things most of us take for granted – that the family treasured most.

“Now we have a place that we can stretch out, and we can shower,” Luis said. “And now that we are here, we can eat when we’re hungry. On the streets, we couldn’t buy warm food.”

After a few months, Luis found additional job opportunities and was able to increase his income. Meanwhile, the family began to work with their Hopelink case manager to learn about financial tools that would help them lower some of their expenses, prioritize bills and explore ways to build credit and begin saving for the future.

By February 2020, the family felt more confident about their housing search, and – armed with a strong credit report and job history, as well as an excellent background check – applied for a new place to live.

Sadly, they learned their income exceeded requirements in the development to which they’d applied, by only a few dollars. Having done everything right yet falling short was disheartening, but the family persevered. In July 2020, when another housing opportunity at Hopelink opened up, Luis and Madeylen submitted an application, and were approved. A few weeks later, the family signed their first lease, and got the keys to the place they now call home.

When the family first came to Hopelink, they had only a car and the clothes on their backs. Today, they have a permanent home, and Luis is working fulltime. Maria is enrolled in school and now has her very own space; something she never had while living with her parents in a car.

Although they have lived in the United States for some time, Luis and Madeylen continue to be grateful to call this country home.

“We came here to escape from violence in our country,” Luis said. “And we are so grateful to be in a country that takes you in. Everyone we have met has been great to us; we have been treated so well. Today … we feel free.”

For now, their goals are both measured and practical.

“I think the future gets built little by little,” Luis said. “The first step is to recover – emotionally, and financially. But for the moment? To stay put!”

Warm food when they’re hungry, plenty of room to stretch out, a home with a mailing address and a door that locks … Luis and Madeylen have the foundation they need to follow their dreams. And … a quiet space for Maria to begin painting the brightest possible future.
Hopelink's 2020 Events Go Virtual

Farm Fresh Feast
In 2020, a total of 206 Farm Fresh Feasters enjoyed wine and a multicourse boxed dinner prepared by local celebrity chef John Howie – along with a lively auction – from the comfort of their homes, patios and backyards in Hopelink’s 7th annual event. Guests raised $156,652 for Hopelink services.

Reaching Out Luncheon
Hopelink’s 25th annual Reaching Out Luncheon featured a virtual discussion about the link between poverty and racism, with special guests Soledad O’Brien, Brittany Packnett-Cunningham and Gordon McHenry, Jr. A total of 583 guests raised $749,576 to help Hopelink families affected by the pandemic.

Turkey Trot
The virtual reality of Hopelink’s 20th annual Turkey Trot 5K Family Fun Run & Walk offered several unique advantages over the traditional event in Kirkland: Participants had a full week to log their Ks, and trotters were able to join the event from as far away as Missouri, Hawaii, and British Columbia! A total of 395 participants raised $37,642.

End Summer Hunger
In 2020, Hopelink’s annual End Summer Hunger campaign provided additional food to help ensure that families affected by the coronavirus pandemic would have enough to eat during the summer months.
And in the fall, Hopelink provided backpacks filled with school supplies to 2,107 children.

Lend a Hoping Hand
At the end of an unprecedented year of challenge and uncertainty, the holidays were feeling anything but festive for a lot of local families. And in 2020, the annual tradition of Hopelink holiday gift rooms wasn’t possible because of the coronavirus pandemic. Instead? A generous Hopelink community raised enough to provide gift cards to 1,253 families – including 3,324 children!
Meet Hopelink's new CEO, Dr. Cushinberry

Dr. Catherine Cushinberry, are there any moments in your life that were epiphanous for you? An aha moment where you learned something important about yourself? As an 8-year-old, I sat on my bedroom floor and read about the Dead Sea, particularly how buoyant it would make you because of the level of salt deposits. I wasn’t a strong swimmer but was intrigued by the idea of floating without effort. I said to myself I would swim in the Dead Sea. We were poor. No one in my family had been abroad. I had no reason to believe that was possible for me. Over 18 years later, I swam in the Dead Sea. At that moment I realized how powerful intention is to my life. If there is something I desire, I fully believe it can become my reality.

Who were some significant influences in your life and why? Most significant to my life is my mother, the first to receive her college education in my family. She raised me as a single mom. My father left when I was two. She was a trailblazer without acknowledging it and never told me what I could not try or achieve. Other significant influences in my life are my aunts and cousins. I come from a line of women who are leaders, especially Catherine Rhodes, who was my maternal grandmother. I am her namesake. I would also include nonprofit leader Dr. Linda
Jo Turner. She showed me what a compassionate leader looked like who was focused on excellence.

You’ve played a leadership role in organizations that empower individuals while also building community. Is there a common thread in your work that you’re most passionate about? The common thread for me is a focus on improving the lives of children and families. I am a systems thinker, so I believe when you can positively impact various parts of a family’s ecosystem, then you significantly increase the chances of progress for generations to come. I lead not only for today, but with an eye toward the future.

In your previous work, is there one thing you were able to accomplish that you are particularly proud of? I am particularly proud of the work I accomplished with my team in my most recent role with City Year Memphis. I was able to take my experiences home and establish an organization that will be sustainable for years to come. Much of the work has been focused in the neighborhood where I was raised, where some of my family and friends live. I’m proud of what we accomplished for children and families of Memphis.

What drew you to Hopelink?
For generations, my family benefited from the types of services Hopelink has provided for 50 years. We were recipients of food, housing, financial and transportation assistance. It sustained us as we navigated generational poverty because of slavery, until my mother, a transitional character in my family, received her education and set me and others on a different path. The opportunity to lead work that provides other families the same and better resources is what connects me to Hopelink.

What role do you think organizations such as Hopelink should play in the broader community? I think organizations should be working together to identify where there are gaps in services to the community and provide services as partners and not competitors. The last thing any community needs is to have organizations posturing for position or power. The broader community benefits when organizations are communicating, sharing information and building bridges to increase equity and access to services and reduce any one being left out or behind.

This year, Hopelink is celebrating 50 years of serving this area. In 2071, what do you hope our community will look like? This is challenging to answer because there is so much I need to learn about the look of the community now. From my vantage point, I would like the community to have created spaces and places where any and everyone who is in need of support can be seen and heard and services are quickly dispatched to them. I hope, with the use of technology, there is innovation in how quickly we can truly meet people where they are, no matter where they are located in the community.

QUICK TAKE:

Favorite activity on a non-work day? Traveling or experiencing a new place or space.

Best advice you’ve ever received? There is no such thing as writer’s block. Just start writing, even if it seemingly makes no sense. You’ll have something to edit and build on. My Ph.D. advisor, Dr. Larry Ganong, gave me this advice and would often say, “I can work with something. I can’t work with nothing.”

Three words you’d use to describe yourself? Visionary, fun, self-actualized.

What are you most eager to explore in your new community? Meeting people, hiking trails, wineries, different cuisines and fresh salmon and learning more about REI and what it will mean to my outdoor life (my staff told me about this and now I’m extremely curious).
At the core of who we are, we at Hopelink champion the success of our community and work to break down barriers that are in the way of all people fulfilling their dreams and aspirations. My work at Hopelink centers on the barriers that hide in the dark and often revolve around issues of the heart. Challenges in our communities like racism, xenophobia, systemic inequity and more seek to prevent our clients from reaching the goals they set for themselves. By refining our processes to use equity, diversity and inclusion frameworks as our foundation and deeply investing in external advocacy work, we strive to be great partners for our clients.

This year, we strengthened our advocacy agenda, paying even more attention to policies regarding systems changes. High on our list of priorities were policy changes to policing, childcare, housing stability and other community needs. Due to the pandemic, we were unable to travel to the capital in support of our annual Advocacy Day, but that was not going to stop our commitment to engaging the Hopelink community in advocacy. Instead, for the first (but certainly not the last) time, we hosted a voter registration drive at Hopelink sites. Community members, volunteers, staff and clients received information on the voter registration process and were able to register to vote the same day.

In an age where many states are beginning to roll back voter rights to mirror that of the Jim Crow era – making it much harder for communities of color to exercise their right to vote – we are grateful to live in a state that is expanding the right to vote, and we look forward to doing our part to ensure that every member of our community is able to use their voice and their vote.

In future issues of Reaching Out, you will hear from other community leaders whose incredible work is moving us closer to being an equitable community free of poverty. It will take each and every one of us to break the hold of racism and systemic inequity in our communities, and I look forward to working hard alongside of you to make that vision a reality.

About the author:

Mariama Suwaneh is Hopelink’s Director of Equity, Diversity and Inclusion, with responsibility for developing and implementing the organization’s Equity, Diversity and Inclusion initiative. Suwaneh joined Hopelink from the University of Washington in April 2020, where she previously implemented an EDI strategy across the UW Advancement team.
Community Partner:

Skykomish Harvest Food Bank

Hopelink isn’t the only local organization that got its start as neighbors helping neighbors. In 2012, Skykomish Valley residents Debbie Allegric and Debra Janasz stepped up to fill a need in their community: ensuring that their neighbors would have access to food.

The first local food bank opened at the Skykomish town hall, then briefly moved to the Malone store before settling into the Skykomish Masonic Hall about a year later. Today, the Skykomish Harvest Food Bank serves more than 150 families per month, distributing over two tons of food.

Coordinator Kim Farmer says the food bank has no paid staff and relies on 24 volunteers to pick up and deliver food, as well as organize and manage food bank days. Farmer - who grew up in the valley - also is a one-person advertising campaign, using signs, social media and word-of-mouth and even sharing her personal cellphone number to let people know about the food bank.

In addition to Hopelink’s Mobile Market making regular stops at Masonic Hall, Hopelink also provides the food bank with fresh gleaned produce and excess perishable food, as well as back packs filled with school supplies in the fall. The Skykomish food bank also is a subcontractor for Hopelink’s lead role with the federal Emergency Food Assistance Program (EFAP), which also provides food.

Like most food banks, Farmer said Skykomish has experienced an increase in demand due to the coronavirus pandemic, with about 25 percent more people coming in. Demand for delivery also increased as state residents were advised to stay home as much as possible.

After nearly 10 years, the Skykomish food bank has become a mainstay in the local community. Neighbors helping neighbors through a pandemic is a trial no one expected, but knowing the food bank is available year-round is what matters most. Farmer says that those who visit the food bank are continually amazed by what is available.

“’I can't believe you have so much food,’ is something we hear often,” she said, “and you do so much for the community.”

The Skykomish Harvest Food Bank’s two dozen volunteers plan to keep it that way.

Tell us what you think!

Hopelink is committed to a vision of a community free of poverty. What do you think is the most significant step we can take to make that vision a reality? And what needs to happen on a community or public policy level?

Let us know at ReachingOut@hopelink.org, and we may share your ideas in a future issue.

This publication of our leadership donors recognizes recent gifts with cash contributions totaling more than $5,000. Every effort has been made to correctly list contributors. If we have your name wrong, or you want to make a change, please contact Josalyn Ford at 425.952.3042.

We are equally grateful to the many individuals, businesses and organizations not listed who have also given cash and/or in-kind contributions to Hopelink over the past year.
The 1969 recession rocked this area. Plummeting demand in the aerospace industry hit Boeing, the region’s largest employer, hard. Unemployment in Seattle reached 12 percent. And then the billboard appeared ... suggesting it was time to turn out the lights.

But for a few Bothell neighbors caught in the downturn, it was not the time to wait and hope things got better. It was time to rebuild their community.

They helped each other find jobs, and they made sure their neighbors had food, and rides to medical appointments. And along the way, they found a community eager to help.

By 1982, the organization that would become Hopelink had expanded to cover most of King County outside of Seattle – opening centers in Kirkland, Snoqualmie Valley, Bellevue and Redmond to provide food and other emergency assistance. In 1984, Hopelink opened the first permanent emergency shelter for homeless families in north and east King County.

Over time, Hopelink added programs and services that not only provide stability, but help ensure a path out of poverty. And Hopelink has continued to pursue innovation – revamping food banks to resemble grocery stores, and ensuring that families in Hopelink housing are able to work with case managers to map out a stronger future.

In recent years, Hopelink’s vision of a community free of poverty has included advocacy efforts aimed at addressing inequity and eliminating root causes of poverty.

Neighbors helping neighbors gave Hopelink its start. Fifty years later, the ongoing support and generosity of this community are still the reason we’re able to provide services to 65,000 people every year.
